PREFACE.

Wykeham's statutes enjoin 'quod fiat unum registrum (a register) de pergameno compositum et ligatum in quaternis in quo scribantur nomina et cognomina omnium et singulorum tam in scolares dicti Collegii quam in presbyteros ejusdem admissorum.' No register was kept for a number of years, but in or about the year 1406 Archbishop Fitzalan reminded the Warden and Fellows of their obligation to keep one in a letter which he addressed to them about a boy for whom he wanted a nomination to a scholarship. The names of the Wardens and Fellows are recorded in a quarto volume which was purchased in consequence of the Archbishop's injunction. It also contains Heete's Life of Wykeham, which was recently published by the Rev. George Herbert Moberly[1], and a number of inventories and records. The name of Warden Morys is the first in this register, and then come the names of five Fellows, Crudeshale, Dyrley, More, Hende and Lemmanesworth, with 26 Nov. 1397 as the date of their admission. It is recorded elsewhere[2] that More and Lemmanesworth, with three other priests named Beach, Self, and Knight, had been appointed Fellows by Wykeham nearly three years before, viz. on 20 Dec. 1394. And we find in the oldest fragment that we have of the Book of the Seneschal of the Hall—for the autumn quarter of the year 1395—that during the period to which it relates there were from ten to twelve 'sacerdotes' in residence, among whose names appear those quoted above from Wykeham's Register. These 'sacerdotes' ranked after the Warden and Informator, and before the Chaplains, Hostiarius and Layclerks. It is obvious, that from the time when residence commenced in the College buildings, a staff of priests must have been wanted for Divine worship: and one is disposed to regard both these 'sacerdotes' and the Fellows of the Bishop's Register as the 'uncovenanted' predecessors of the first regular Fellows, who were admitted 26 Nov. 1397[1].

Of the Wardens it may suffice to say that they were to be chosen by the Fellows of New College, and to have the general superintendence of affairs which the name denotes.

The Fellows, 'presbyteri seculares,' were to be ten in number, and 'perpetui,' that is to say, lifeholders, and not removeable like the schoolmasters and chaplains. As the title implies, they were to be in priest's orders. Vacancies were to be filled up by election, the electors being the Warden and remaining Fellows, who were to meet, after due notice, in the College Chapel, and elect the man whom 'pro honore utilitate et comodo Collegio magis profuturum crediderint.' The candidates were to be graduates, and preference was to be given, first of all, to natives of Wykeham's own diocese of Winchester, and then to natives of the following counties, Oxford, Berks, Wilts, Bucks, Essex, Middlesex, Dorset, Kent, Sussex and Cambridge, in order. Every Fellow was on his admission to swear to obey the statutes in their plain, natural, and grammatical sense, to protect the interests of the College, to keep out of internal disputes and scandals, to obey the Warden, and advise him in graver matters, and not to reveal the secrets of the house[2]. One of them was to be chosen Sub-Warden, and another Sacrist, annually, and two of them were to be Bursars, with a stipend of 13*s.* 4*d.* each. But their chief duties were in the College Chapel, and these in the pre-Reformation period must have occupied most of their time.

The election of Fellows no longer takes place, owing to changes in the constitution of the College, but under an Order of the Queen in Council every member of the Governing Body of Winchester School is made a Fellow of Winchester College while he remains a member of the Governing Body. These Fellowships are non-stipendiary.

[1] The Founder's Commission to Simon, Bishop of Achonry, to consecrate the College Chapel bears date 7 July, 1395. The consecration took place on St. Kenelm's Day (December 13) in the same year. The admission of the five Fellows in November, 1397, seems to mark the completion of the College buildings, which were not completed until the erection of the Cloisters in that year. The 'ymages,' i.e. a Crucifix, a Virgin Mary, and a St. John, were not put up in the Chapel till the year 1403.

[2] See Minutes of Evidence before Select Committee on Education of Lower Orders, 1818. Third report, p. 130.

The College was incorporated on 20 Oct. 1382, and for upwards of twenty years before its incorporation Wykeham had been supporting a number of poor scholars, but neither the names of them, nor of the scholars under the incorporation, are recorded anywhere. Some of them doubtless appear, without means of identification, among the early Fellows of New College, which was opened on 14 April, 1386. The Register of Scholars begins with the names of the seventy who, according to Heete, made their solemn entrance into the College, chanting in procession, at 9 A.M. on 26 March, 1393. The entries down to the year 1425 inclusive seem to be in the same hand. The College authorities, when they did begin to keep a register, seem to have ignored everything that occurred before 26 March, 1393. That day is called 'prima fundatio' in the head note to the Scholars' Register, although the College was a corporate body quite ten years old at the time[1]; and Warden Morys, the successor of the eminent Cranlegh and of Westcote, is actually called 'primus custos istius Collegii' on the brass to his memory in the College Chapel so successfully reproduced by Dr. Edwin Freshfield's generosity.

These aboriginal scholars were housed somewhere on the western slope of St. Giles' Hill, in the Soke or suburb of Winchester, within the jurisdiction of the Bishop as Lord of the Soke Manor and without the jurisdiction of the Mayor and Bailiffs of Winchester. The first schoolmaster whom we hear of was one Robert de Herton, a 'grammaticus' or qualified teacher, whom Wykeham engaged in September, 1373. The bargain was[2] that Herton should teach grammar, that is to say, the elements of a classical education exclusive of Greek, to any poor scholars whom Wykeham was then keeping, or might in future keep, during a term of ten years from Michaelmas, 1373. Herton's labours during that period were, as far as appears from the contract, to be uninterrupted by vacations[1], and he was to find a substitute if ill, or when he went a pilgrimage to Rome, which he was at liberty to do once only. Wykeham on his part was to find an assistant. What became of Herton we know not. John Milton was the schoolmaster who took his place in the procession of March, 1393.

[1] It was incorporated, 20 Oct., 1382, by the name of 'Seinte Marie College of Wynchestre.' It is now styled in legal documents 'St. Mary College of Winchester, near Winchester' to distinguish it from the sister foundation of Saint Mary College of Winchester in Oxford, commonly called New College. It seems to have been generally known as the 'Newe Colledge,' or New College, like the one at Oxford, until the seventeenth century, when the adjective 'New' having become unmeaning, and there being no other College in Winchester to distinguish it from, it became known simply as 'The College,' or 'Winchester College.'

We know that Wykeham maintained as well as taught these poor scholars of his, for Pope Urban's Bull (9 May, 1380) granting him permission to found the College recognises it as a fact. The first step towards endowment was taken in the year 1381. In that year Wykeham obtained leave from his spiritual and temporal Sovereigns, Pope Urban VI and Richard II, to appropriate to his table[2] (mensae episcopali) the Church of Downton in Wilts, a possession of the See of Winchester, for the maintenance of seventy poor scholars. The specific number of seventy appears here for the first time. A separate account of the income from the church was to be kept, so that it might be specifically applied for the maintenance of those for whom it was intended.

This arrangement did not last long, for in September, 1385 (the College having been incorporated and empowered to hold land in mortmain meanwhile), Wykeham with all due legal precautions annexed the Church of Downton with its glebe and tithe to his new College, upon trust for the support and maintenance of the scholars upon the foundation[3]; and made amends to his successors by endowing the See with lands of more than equal value, which he caused to be thrown into the park of the Bishop's castle at Farnham. At the same time he made provision for the spiritual needs of the parish by causing the Vicarage to be regularly endowed with the small tithe, anticipating that which the law was about to require by the Statutes of Vicarages[4].

The provisions of Wykeham's statutes touching the scholars are most elaborate. In choosing them, preference was to be given to

[1] The Founder may have disapproved of holidays, or considered them unnecessary, since they are nowhere mentioned in his Statutes. But he did not go so far as Dean Colet, the Founder of St. Paul's School, whose injunction 'I will that there be no remidaies' admits of no mistake.

[2] See as to the meaning of this expression, and the distinction between 'appropriation' and 'impropriation,' Lord Stowell's judgment in Duke of Portland v. Bingham, Haggard's Consistory Cases, vol. i. p. 163.

Founder's kin, and they were to become Fellows at once, when sped to Oxford, instead of undergoing a probation of two years.

The rest, who were not Founder's kin, were to be 'pauperes et indigentes,' of good manners (manners makyth man), and towardly, apt for study, and proficient in reading, plain song, and Latin grammar ('in antiquo Donato'), Donatus' Grammar of the fourth century being still in use. No boy who was not Founder's kin was to be admitted under the age of eight, or over that of twelve, except in special cases. Scholars who were not of kin to the Founder were to be chosen in the first place from parishes in which one of the two St. Mary Colleges had property, or from the Diocese of Winchester; in the next place, from the Counties of Oxon, Berks, Wilts, Somerset, Bucks, Essex, Middlesex, Dorset, Kent, Sussex or Cambridge, in order; and thirdly, from any other part of England. There is no trace of any preference for natives of the City of Winchester above natives of the rest of the diocese. The first scholar on the roll of 1393 was a Kingsclere man. Two came from Calais whilst it was in the diocese of Canterbury, namely Adyson in 1536 and Ruckwood in 1548. Eustace came from New York in 1771, Mabson from Flushing, Long Island, in 1774, and Moore from New York in 1781. The register gives the parish or place of birth in most cases, sometimes adding that the father was a tenant of one of the two Colleges. A tradition lingers in some of the College Manors that the sons of tenants have a claim to admission to the College.

Upon attaining the age of fifteen years every scholar had to take the oath of fealty and secrecy enjoined by the Statutes[1], and a year later, to receive the first tonsure. The porter's lodge was the 'domus barbitonsoris' where the operation was performed. No boy suffering from incurable disease, or who was maimed in such a way as would eventually disqualify him for ordination, was eligible for admission. A scholar who became possessed of property yielding more than ten marks (£6 13*s.* 4*d.*) per annum, had to leave at once, unless he were Founder's kin. This statute received a liberal interpretation in after times, founded on the reduction in the exchangeable value of money. Founder's kin might stay in College until they attained their twenty-fifth year, unless in the meantime they succeeded to property worth upwards of twenty marks per annum. Every other scholar became 'superannuate' and had to leave as soon as he completed his eighteenth year, unless his name was on the roll for New College: in which case

[1] On Sept. 11, 1400, the Founder caused this oath to be administered to as many of the foundation as were of age to take the oath. Henry Campeden

he might stop on another year. If a 'consanguineus' turned out to be not grounded enough in reading, plain song, and grammar, the Warden might assign him to a chaplain or layclerk for improvement; and in addition, every 'consanguineus' was to be in charge of one of the more advanced and discreeter sort of scholars, who was to make him perfect in grammar, and who was to receive 6*s.* 8*d.* for doing so. Here we see the origin of the present system of prefect tuition, under which certain senior scholars are paid by the College to overlook the juniors while preparing their lessons.

Touching their dress, every scholar was to receive at Christmas enough cloth to make him a long gown (toga talaris) with a hood. He had, and still has, to get the cloth made up at his own expense. The 'consanguineus,' unless he had 100*s.* a year in his own right, was to be found by the College in linen and woollen clothes, shoes, and other necessaries of the kind. The other scholars got nothing but the cloth for their gowns. It was not to cost more than 3*s.* 4*d.* a yard. It cost 5*s.* a yard in the sixteenth century, and it costs 7*s.* 6*d.* a yard now. It is 60 in. wide. The statutes do not say of what colour it was to be; but it was not to be black, white, russet, or butcher's blue (glaucus), no doubt because these were the colours of existing religious bodies. A new gown was only to be worn on Sundays or Saints' days, or other special occasions, unless with the Warden's leave. No scholar might sell, pledge or part with a gown till he had had it more than three years. When done with, a gown was to descend to a chorister. These boys were intended to wear the old clothes of the scholars. But in the year 1420 John Fromond, of Sparsholt, Hants, the munificent founder of the Chantry Chapel, devised property to the College, the income from which was to be laid out for ever in buying clothes (pro indumentis emendis) for the choristers, with a proviso that every chorister should receive annually three yards of cloth of a different colour from that which was given to the scholars. At the present day the choristers are fed, lodged, and educated, as well as clothed, at the expense of the College. The frontispiece represents a scholar of the year 1434 in the toga talaris referred to above. It is taken from a brass in the church of Headbourne Worthy, near Winchester, to the memory of John Kent (adm. 1431), who died 31 August, 1434. He was the son of one Simon Kent of Reading, and had relations at Headbourne Worthy, where he died, during the holidays, perhaps, if there were holidays then, as his death occurred on August 31, or he may have been removed thither by his parents in the hope of escaping the sickness, of which eight scholars died in that year.

At each of the two daily meals (prandium and cena) the Warden was to preside at the middle table (there was no dais, and no high table, and the hall had a stone or concrete floor) in company with the Sub-Warden, Head Master, and Senior Fellows. Those who dined were not, as a general rule, to have more than three dishes at a meal. But there were festivals and obits to be celebrated, no less than twenty-two of the latter, and it was the Bursars' duty to find the money for a 'pittance' or extra dish on these occasions. At the two side tables the rest of the Fellows, with the chaplains and hostiarius, were to take their seats, and after them the Scholars, each as he came into Hall, without any precedence amongst themselves. The layclerks were to assist the servants in waiting, and had their meal afterwards with the servants and choristers. During every meal one of the scholars was to read aloud from the Lives of the Fathers, the Dicta Doctorum, or Holy Writ. The custom of a scholar reading aloud the 'Gospel for the Day,' at a certain stage of the annual Election dinner, may be traced to this source.

The scholars were to be elected by a board or 'Chamber' of six electors, namely, the Wardens of Wykeham's two Colleges, two Fellows of New College, to be chosen for their discretion, who were called Posers, and the Sub-Warden and Head Master. The election was to take place yearly, on a day to be fixed by the Warden of New College, between St. Thomas a Becket's day (July 7) and October 1. Copies of the Warden's letter from Oxford notifying the date were to be posted on the outer and inner gates of College, and on the north door of Chapel, now walled up. The Warden and Posers were to travel from Oxford to Winchester at the expense of New College, but (so careful was the Founder) they were not to travel with more than six horses, lest too much expense should be incurred. The duty of the 'Chamber' was not only to elect the Scholars 'ad Winton.' and 'ad Oxon.,' but also to inquire how the statutes were observed, and whether the scholars were properly cared for, and generally, to overhaul and correct things that needed correction. One example of the exercise of their power may be mentioned here, the case of Richard Fiennes, whom they admitted to a Fellowship in September 1713, when the Warden and Fellows could not agree upon a candidate.

The names of the Scholars who were elected 'ad Winton.' and 'ad Oxon.' were to be entered on a roll or indenture, from which vacancies as they occurred during the ensuing twelve months were to be filled up. Many of these rolls exist, the oldest being of the year 1407, but the series is far from complete.

The Scholars were lodged in the six chambers on the ground floor of Middle or Chamber Court. Seventh Chamber was originally the school room, and did not become a chamber until 'School' was built in the year 1687. It was larger before 'Seventh Chamber Passage' was taken out of it in order to give access to School, ye. not nearly large enough, according to modern notions, for a school of seventy boys. Not that this was the whole number, for there were a few commoners from the very first (one of the causes to which the Society attributed their financial difficulties between 1397 and 1401 was the expense of maintaining them), and the number must have grown rapidly, for we gather from Bishop Henry de Beaufort's Injunction of 1412, that the Informator was then teaching eighty commoners in addition to the seventy scholars, and that in his, the Visitor's, opinion seventy scholars plus ten extranei (the number limited by the statutes) were as many as one master ought to attempt to teach.

The chambers upstairs were intended for the senior members of the Society. The Warden had what is now termed Election Chamber (because in later days the ceremony of electing scholars was performed there), and the room above it, now disused. He also had the Chamber over Fifth to entertain visitors in. This Chamber became the abode of the Warden of New College and Posers at Election time, and is now part of the Second Master's residence. The Chambers over First, Second and Third, were designed for nine of the Fellows, three to a Chamber. A Chamber over Sixth with a window at its western end, now blocked by the Fellows' Common Room, was appropriated to the tenth or junior Fellow and the two schoolmasters. This arrangement lasted until the sixteenth century, when Guy Dobbins (Hostiarius 1574, Fellow 1585) enlarged his portion, i. e. the western end, of this chamber, at his own cost, by the addition of two rooms, and the set of three rooms thus formed was assigned to the Informator, Benjamin Heyden, in 1597, in consideration of his paying £1 a year for the use of them. The two rooms built by Dobbins were pulled down when the present Fellows' Common Room was built. The Chamber over Fifth mentioned above was assigned to Dr. Burton between the years 1729 and 1740 for his own use, in consideration of the expense he had incurred in erecting a chamber twenty feet square with a closet to it, over the bakehouse, being the room now known as the Fellows' Common Room; and the Warden of New College and Posers when they came to Winchester after that year put up in the Chamber over Fourth, which became known as the New College Warden's room. It is now a dormitory.

The three chaplains lodged together in the Chamber next the kitchen that is now the Second Master's drawing-room. It does not appear where the layclerks and choristers were quartered. Perhaps with the servants in the outer Court. The College was crowded, and one is not surprised to find that the Warden and Fellows accepted Fromond's endowment with a stipulation that the Chantry priest should not reside in Chamber Court. There was literally not room for one more: and they built him a chamber over against the eastern side of the entrance gateway, on the site of the ancient part of the Warden's lodgings facing College Street.

The existing Prefect system may be traced to a direction of the Founder that in each of the six chambers three of the elder and discreeter sort of scholars should be placed in order to maintain discipline. These were called 'praepositi' or 'praepostors' at first, as they still are at Eton, but came to be called Prefects in the course of the last century[1]. The discipline may have been good, and the teaching sufficient: but the life of a scholar must have been a hard one after every allowance made for the habits of the age. It was one of strict preparation for New College and Holy Orders. There is no provision in the statutes for exercise or recreation, and most of the amusements of Wykeham's time were expressly forbidden No scholar might ride, or keep a dog, or have a ferret, or a hawk, or shoot with the bow, or throw anything—a prohibition favouring the College windows, but which, literally interpreted, forbad any game of ball whatever. The chambers were floored with a chalk concrete, and the scholars lay on straw. The chambers were not floored with board, and bedsteads were not provided, until the sixteenth century, and then through the liberality of an old Wykehamist, Dean Fleshmonger (adm. 1491). Nor was it until the year 1708 that the scholars were relieved from the 'servile and foul office' of making their beds and sweeping their chambers by the Visitor, Bishop Trelawney, who recommended that bedmakers should be hired, and that the scholars should not be compelled to rise before 6 A.M. in the winter half year. The scholars' diet at this period was plain enough. At what time the change from two meals per diem to three was made does not appear.

[1] See under Robinson (1680). So, too, the use of 'major' and 'minor' to distinguish elder and younger brothers has gone out at Winchester, where 'senior' and 'junior' are employed, but continues at Eton.

Upon Vigils, Rogation Days, Ember Days, and the Eves of Gaudies nothing was allowed for supper. The diet was meagre in Lent at this period.

The quantity of near half a pound of good wheaten bread was allowed to each scholar at every meal, and something more than a pint of beer to each scholar at dinner and at supper, and something less than a pint to him at breakfast, besides beavor[1] beer after dinner and supper in summer time. It appears that the College found it necessary in order to hinder the great waste which the scholars made of beer to order them a fixed quantity, and did (it is recorded) kindly intend to have it divided equally among the scholars by giving each of them a separate quantity in a copper pot by itself which was provided for that purpose: but the scholars showing an unbecoming dislike of this provision, they had a certain quantity set down at every meal, which they were to share among themselves as they could agree[2].

In 1711, when the College made the above attempt to limit the consumption of beer, the Commons were amended and enlarged, as follows:—

Wykeham's system of intelligent selection from a wide area, as a means of ensuring a due succession of scholars, showed signs of weakness in his own day[1] and very soon yielded to the system of nominations, which continued until the recent introduction of open competition. But the Electors by no means enjoyed a monopoly of the patronage. From the time of Henry IV the Crown exercised the privilege of recommending one or more boys annually. The Bishops of Winchester, as Visitors, claimed a similar privilege. After the Restoration, when the Sovereign purchased his return to the throne by the surrender of so many privileges, the College tried hard to get rid of this one, but without effect. Warden Traffles in 1702 got the system of King's letters abolished as regards New College by his own personal exertions, of which he has left a journal: but it continued in force as regards Winchester College until the year 1726, in which year the Prime Minister, the Duke of Newcastle, was induced to recall a King's letter in favour of John Trenchard Bromhead, upon the faith of a representation by the Electors that the Statutes required them to elect on oath the most worthy candidates. The privilege of the Bishops of Winchester had already met with a similar fate, so that from the year 1726, until nominations were abolished, the Electors had the patronage in their own hands. The demand for nominations led to attempts to limit the number of Founder's kin, which was not limited by the Statutes. We find very few of them in the Register during the first hundred and fifty years of the existence of the College, but their number increased as the value of the privilege became better understood; and in the year 1580 Bishop Cooper made an order 'for ye sett number of eighteen Founders in both ye Colledges' which continued in force until the privilege ceased to exist.

Reasons have been given for regarding the life of scholars, in former days, as a hard one. If it had not been so in the opinion of contemporaries there would not have been so many benefactions for providing extra faggots and commons, and otherwise improving their condition. It was also a sickly life, and no wonder. Though without the walls of the city, the College lay near to and below it, among the crowded tenements of the Soke. Knowing as much as we do of the mortality in the fifteenth century, we are shocked to find that eight scholars died in the year 1402, three in each of the years 1408 and 1413, four in the year 1429, seventeen in the year 1430, four in the year 1431, and eight in the year 1434. Probably the water, drawn from shallow wells in a porous soil, or dipped from a stream that had flowed through the city, was contaminated, and Wayneflete's grant in 1483 of the right to bring the water by a conduit from Segryme's well at the foot of St. Giles' Hill was a priceless boon. But, as the scholars may now boast of a bigger Sanatorium than any other public school enjoys, so they may boast of having had a Sanatorium, such as it was, before any other public school had one. In the year 1544 the College acquired a farm on the downs at Preston Candover, Hants, by an exchange with King Henry VIII, and they immediately fitted up the principal barn with windows and bedplaces, and put a clause in the lease that they should have the use of it for their scholars whenever the plague visited Winchester.

Partly owing to the high death-rate, the average number of annual vacancies in College during the first hundred years (1394–1493) was no less than 19·16. During the second century (1494–1593) it fell to 16·6. During the third century (1594–1693) it fell to 14·65. During the fourth century (1694–1793) it rose to 16·51. For the current or fifth century the average so far is nearly 14·25.

The least number of vacancies in any year was four in 1413, following a year of thirty-six vacancies. The greatest number of vacancies was forty-one in 1793, following the rebellion of April in that year.

Perhaps the most distinguished year was 1661, which comprises a Bishop (Manningham) a Chief Justice (Herbert) a Secretary of State (Trenchard) a Prebendary (Houghton) a Public Orator (Cradock), and a Head Master (Harris).

Of the Christian names occurring in the first two hundred years (1393–1592) John is by far the most common. It occurs more than 1060 times, and was borne by nearly one out of every three boys who were admitted during that period. William, the next in point of frequency, occurs more than 560 times, Thomas more than 500 times, Richard about 390 times, Robert about 250 times, and then the following names, arranged in order of frequency:—Henry, Edward, Nicholas, George (chiefly in the latter part of the period), Edmund, Walter, Roger, Christopher, Antony, Simon, James, Francis, Peter, Philip, Matthew, Michael, Alexander, Geoffrey, Giles, Arthur, Humphrey, Charles (chiefly in the latter part of the period). The first instance of a compound Christian name (according to Sir Edward Coke, Inst. 3ª, 'a man cannot have two names of baptism, though he may have divers surnames') occurs in the year 1697, in the case of Edward Henry Bainton. The earlier cases of Hussey Elwes-Hinton-Chock (1667) (whose name of baptism is Husselhin in the New College Register) and Walter Long-Clark (1694) seem to be cases of compound surnames.

The age is not recorded before the year 1472. Arabic numerals after a name thus (10) denote until the year 1566 the age at the time of admission. After that year they denote the age at the time of election—an important difference, for admissions went on throughout the year, as vacancies occurred, and a boy might be a whole year older when he was admitted than when he was elected. In the last century the day of birth or of baptism was generally recorded, and for some years past it has been the practice to record both.

Explanations. 'Ad off' or 'Ad obseq' with or without the epithet 'seculare' means that the scholar entered upon some secular office or employment. 'Ad servitium' that he went into the service of some employer; 'ad religionem' that he became a monk. S. means that he was superannuate and did not succeed to New College. The Fox and Burton exhibitions for deserving boys leaving in consequence of superannuation were founded in the year 1729, and formed the nucleus of a fund which now admits of at least four exhibitions of £50 each, tenable for four years, being given away yearly to boys leaving the school for the University. LL.B. and B.C.L. and LL.D. and D.C.L. are used indifferently.

The notes under the names are from the margin of the register, and other sources. More might have been said about some of the names, and something might have been said about many names about which nothing is said: but to have aimed at much more would have delayed and probably prevented the publication of the work. To apply what Robert Heete says of Wykeham's deeds to the careers of Wykeham's children:

> 'Nam si cuncta velim diffusius illa referre
> Quae mora, quis calamus sufficit hoc ad opus?'

In conclusion, the transcriber tenders his thanks to the Warden of New College for his kindness in allowing him to refer to his MS. Register of the Fellows of New College; to Charles Trice Martin, Esq., F.S.A., of the Public Record Office, for deciphering a number of crabbed entries of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; and to many others, too numerous to mention by name, who have afforded information about many of those whose names appear in the Register of Winchester Scholars.

1569.

Fenys (Fiennes), Richard, C.F. (14), Broughton, Oxon.
First Lord Saye and Sele under new patent. He was great-great-great-grandson of Margaret daughter of William Wickham of Broughton and wife of Lord Saye. This William Wickham was son and heir of Sir Thomas Wickham, Knight, son of William Perot by Alice, daughter of William Champneys, by Agnes the Founder's sister. This is the entry in the College Register. But the Visitor pronounced it in 1586 to be 'different in material points from the original Roll, and therefore to be utterly void and of no force,' the entry in the original Roll being 'Ric. Fenys de Broughton, consanguineus Dni Fundatoris' only, and there being no proof that Richard Fenys was in fact descended from Agnes Champneys.
